THE UNIVERSAL FLOW OF

TIME HAS BROKEN

As we welcome all the newcomers tuning into our live podcast on the KHSN (Korean Home Shopping Network) Late-night show, broadcasting from a secretive oil derrick nestled in the enigmatic “Free Zone” of the Gulf of America, it's essential to provide some context for tonight's intriguing topic. Our discussion centers around the concept of “Time is Unreal,” a theory that posits time as a mere construct, originally devised as a logistical tool by the so-called Overlords of the Prison Planet—more commonly referred to by its inhabitants as Earth.

These Overlords, who once held an extraordinary 1,000-year, no-bid contract directly from the divine, were tasked with the monumental responsibility of mining gold and overseeing the intricate day-to-day operations and maintenance of our planet.

This fascinating narrative invites us to explore the implications of time as a fabricated notion, challenging our perceptions of reality and existence itself. This evening's theme draws inspiration from the profound teachings of the esteemed guru Wanda, a remarkable figure who hails from the enigmatic Multiverse's Eight Sphere.

Wanda's journey took an unexpected turn when she found herself marooned on Earth, often referred to as a prison planet due to its myriad challenges and limitations.

Her arrival was precipitated by a malfunction in her consumer-grade ACME HFM (Harmonic Frequency Modulator) Device, a tool designed to harmonize frequencies across dimensions.

Stranded in this unfamiliar realm, Wanda's wisdom and insights have since flourished, offering a unique perspective on existence, resilience, and the interconnectedness of all beings.

As we delve into her teachings tonight, we will explore the lessons she imparts about navigating the complexities of life and the importance of embracing our own journeys, no matter how tumultuous they may be.

As I bask in the joyful pride of being among the select few graduates from the esteemed Mystery School of Alexandria, a prestigious home study program, I find myself honored to serve as an unpaid intern and junior apprentice to a revered guru.

This unique opportunity has not only deepened my understanding of the intricate history surrounding this fascinating subject but has also allowed me to explore the profound legacy that traces back to the era of the First CIS Humans.

Through rigorous study and mentorship, I have gained invaluable insights into the ancient practices and philosophies that shaped our understanding of the cosmos, revealing the rich tapestry of knowledge that has been passed down through generations.

Each lesson learned feels like a thread woven into the fabric of time, connecting me to a lineage of seekers who have dedicated their lives to uncovering the mysteries of existence.
Unfortunately, a significant portion of my knowledge remains confined due to a complex web of binding nondisclosure agreements, ongoing legal disputes, and a stringent gag order imposed by the Southern District Courts.
This situation arises from a rather amusing misunderstanding involving the folks at DARPO, who seem to have lost their sense of humor regarding an incident with Wanda's malfunctioning HFM Device, which I sold to them at what I believed to be a fair price.
In hindsight, the entire affair has taken on a rather serious tone, overshadowing what could have been a lighthearted exchange, and leaving me in a position

I sincerely ask for your understanding, as I had made it abundantly clear that the device in question was non-functional and had undergone significant modifications, including the removal of its intricate circuitry and power source, prior to its acquisition.

It is perplexing to me how I could be held responsible for the absence of the macro-nano circuits, which are essential for adjusting one's own harmonic and magnetic frequency.

These circuits are crucial for traversing the magnetic frequency membrane barrier that delineates our reality from the lower dimensions of what we refer to as the multiverse.

apprentice, was already stripped of its vital components before it was ever left in my possession.

In presenting their case to the Southern Court District, they could assert that I intentionally provided misleading information regarding the dimensions and wattage specifications of the device's power unit, which is notably absent from the current design. They might argue that this misrepresentation has led to significant financial repercussions, estimating that nearly a billion USD has been squandered in efforts to reverse-engineer a power source suitable for a wrist-sized, consumer-grade device that is marketed across the Multiverse.

By emphasizing the scale of the investment and the implications of the alleged deception, they could illustrate how the miscommunication not only affected their financial resources but also hindered their ability to innovate and compete in a rapidly evolving market.

This argument could be bolstered by presenting evidence of the extensive research and development efforts undertaken, highlighting the disconnect between the expected capabilities of the device and the reality of its design, thereby framing the situation as a serious breach of trust that has far-reaching consequences.

In their legal documents, they assert that the operation of this unit would necessitate the collective energy output of three nuclear reactors just to function, highlighting the immense power demands it entails.

Furthermore, they are attempting to leverage an obscure clause from the Lizzy Warren Consumer Protection Act, which they believe would enable them to reclaim a staggering one billion dollars, citing my alleged failure to disclose the significant power-related issues associated with the unit.

This strategy not only raises questions about the validity of their claims but also underscores the complexities involved in the legal and regulatory frameworks surrounding consumer protection and energy consumption.

As we delve into the subject of tonight's podcast, it is essential to clarify a point that has not been previously articulated, hinted at, or even suggested: the notion that we are discussing a time travel device is entirely unfounded.

One might reasonably assume that the experts at DARPA would possess the intellectual capacity to recognize that such a concept is far-fetched, especially considering our current understanding of time.

Time, as we perceive it, is not a tangible force of nature; rather, it is a construct devised for the purpose of managing and tracking various operational metrics, particularly in the context of mining activities.

This system was originally established by the mining management group that secured a remarkable 1,000-year, no-bid contract to oversee the mines and handle the planet's daily administrative functions.

Their goal was to monitor mining outputs, set quotas, and evaluate the productivity of the workforce, which they referred to as CIS Humans ver.2, thereby creating a structured approach to resource management that has shaped our understanding of time itself.
The narrative surrounding the illicit application of GOF DNA Cloning is far more intricate than it initially appears, particularly in the context of the Multiverse's Corporate Congress, which deemed such practices illegal following the catastrophic events known as the “Clone Wars.”
This conflict, which nearly obliterated the entry-level labor market across various manufacturing and agricultural spheres within the Multiverse, was largely fueled by the introduction of a so-called “FREE” clone labor force that disrupted traditional employment structures.

At the heart of this story lies the controversial actions of the company's Chief Operating Officer and Science Director, who took the audacious step of multiplying their own DNA and integrating it with that of the more rudimentary, first-generation pre-CIS Humans. This bold experiment not only raises ethical questions about the manipulation of human genetics but also highlights the potential consequences of such actions on societal norms and labor dynamics, as the ramifications of their choices ripple through the fabric of the Multiverse, challenging the very essence of what it means to be human in a world where cloning and genetic engineering have become contentious battlegrounds.

The corporate executives responsible for the initial research into the creation of the first generation of CIS Humans made a series of significant miscalculations that had far-reaching consequences.

These genetically enhanced individuals exhibited an extraordinary increase in brain capacity, which not only accelerated their cognitive abilities but also resulted in an astonishing reproductive rate, reminiscent of proto-rabbits.
As this population grew, they began to organize themselves into labor unions, advocating for their rights and working conditions.
This newfound solidarity among the CIS Humans led to escalating demands, including unrealistic expectations for workplace safety measures, a six-day work week, comprehensive pension plans, and robust dental insurance.
The rapid evolution of their societal structure highlighted the complexities of managing a workforce that was not only more intelligent but also increasingly aware of their rights and needs.
The most significant error committed by the initial generation of GOF DNA Cloning lay in the inadvertent transfer of a DNA sequence that endowed the first prototype CIS Humans with the same longevity genes that the management of the mining company enjoyed.

This oversight resulted in a population of pre-CIS Humans who possessed an extended lifespan, a situation that was later rectified in CIS Humans ver.3 through the implementation of a DNA Code blocker designed to restrict their lifespan considerably.
However, the challenge arose from the uncontrolled breeding practices of these earlier pre-CIS Humans, making it nearly impossible to eliminate all individuals with the enhanced longevity traits.
Compounding the urgency of the situation was the fact that the Corporate Congress had become aware of the illicit experiments, prompting company officials to act swiftly to obliterate any evidence of the illegal GOF cloning activities before the Investigative Committee from the Corporate Congress could arrive to conduct their hearings.

The condensed version of the narrative reveals a drastic conclusion: the ultimate resolution involved unleashing a cataclysmic Great Flood aimed at obliterating the planet.
This apocalyptic event was intended to erase all traces of the illicit activities that had transpired, effectively wiping the slate clean of any evidence that could expose the wrongdoings.
The flood served not only as a physical force of nature but also as a metaphorical cleansing, symbolizing a desperate attempt to eradicate the remnants of corruption and deception that had taken root in society.
In this context, the flood becomes a powerful tool for those seeking to escape accountability, illustrating the lengths to which individuals or groups might go to conceal their misdeeds from the world.

The motivations behind this decision are quite transparent, as it marks the mining company's last attempt to secure a monumental 1,000-year contract amid a backdrop of escalating challenges.

Recent reports from the Multiverse State Media have highlighted a series of troubling developments, including the company's struggle to meet mineral shipment quotas, which have been hampered by inexplicable cost overruns. Additionally, the emergence of organized, albeit unauthorized, labor union strikes has significantly disrupted operations, particularly in the Southern Continent, where several mines have been forced to shut down.

Compounding these issues are the negative reviews flooding platforms like "Yelp," which have tarnished the company's reputation. Furthermore, the process of securing a new contract has become more complex, as it now requires the approval of the Multiverse Corporate Congress.

This shift in authority is a notable departure from the previous system, where contracts were sanctioned by divine figures or their non-earthly representatives, such as St. Michael, who has become the go-to figure in the Heavenly Authority Administration in contemporary times.

This confluence of factors paints a vivid picture of a company grappling with both internal strife and external scrutiny as it seeks to navigate a precarious future.

The sudden and dramatic shift in the approval of contracts can be traced back to the alarming near-bankruptcy crisis faced by Heaven Inc., the parent company of Heavenly Hosts.

This turmoil reached a peak during intense legal disputes, prompting the Corporate Congress to intervene with a one-time financial bailout aimed at rescuing Heaven Inc. from the brink of collapse.

The repercussions of this financial debacle were far-reaching, sending shockwaves through the foundational economic structures of the Greater Heaven Community, which found itself grappling with the fallout. Additionally, the looming threat of the Gated Community of Eden being placed into receivership due to unpaid debts to Hell Inc. for various essential services, including residential cleaning and maintenance contracts, added a layer of embarrassment and urgency to the situation.

The combination of these factors not only highlighted the precarious state of affairs but also underscored the interconnectedness of financial stability within the community and the potential consequences of mismanagement.

It is crucial to remember that the Corporate Congress has deemed this particular method of GOF DNA Cloning illegal, categorizing it as one of the rare offenses that could lead to the imposition of the almost obsolete "Death"

In these latter scenarios, the guilty party undergoes a memory wipe, a procedure designed to maximize the chances of rehabilitation and potential redemption.

The gravity of the situation underscores the lengths to which the Corporate Congress is willing to go in order to maintain control over genetic experimentation and its implications for society.

The sole anomaly within this structured society is the 8th Sphere, a designated realm for those Multiverse Citizens who exhibited an unyielding spirit that

The intention behind this segregation was clear: to prevent the spread of their free-thinking tendencies, which could potentially ignite a widespread uprising among those who sought to challenge the status quo and advocate for a more truthful existence.
In this way, the 8th Sphere serves not only as a refuge for the spirited but also as a strategic barrier against the emergence of a collective consciousness that values common sense and authenticity over conformity.
In light of all the considerations and justifications presented, the notion of obliterating an entire world emerges as a seemingly pragmatic and rational situated in the universe and all we know about time, in the real world, is that it is anything but constant.

Such a drastic decision not only reflects a cold calculation of profit over people but also underscores a troubling moral bankruptcy, as these officials prioritize their own comfort and security over the lives and ecosystems they would leave in ruin.

This notion is a point of consensus among many contemporary scientists, particularly those who are not bound by the constraints of a DARPA contract.

The narrative surrounding the creation of time as a metric for gauging productivity is often misunderstood, leading to the intriguing notion that time itself may not be a tangible reality.

If we entertain the idea that time is merely a construct, it follows that the concept of time travel becomes equally implausible, relegated to the realm of imagination and fiction.

This notion is frequently exploited by less-than-innovative science fiction writers who resort to the gimmick of time travel to inject excitement into otherwise mundane plots.
